SOUTH AMERICAN ELECTION.

JOHN CASE TELLS OF CAMPAIGN METHODS AND ELECTION SCENES.

We Visits the Ancient Salt Mines, the New Iron Works and Colombia's Ningara-Interesting Letter From Bogota, Colombia,

Colonel Theodore S. Case is receiving numerous letters from his son, John L. Case, who is at Bogota, Colombia, South America, with a party of civil engineers. The letters contain much gossipy descrip-tion of the people, their customs and the country. The young man has good powers of observation and manages to see about all that is of interest in that country. In his letter from Bogota dated November 22, he says: "Last Wednesday Mr. Hanson, a young man from Newark, O., named Tucker, and I left Bogota to visit the great salt works at Copaquira and a great iron plant near that place. We went by railroad as far as possible, which was only twenty-four miles, to Mattos. When we reached Manos we were besieged by a crowd of hackmen to hire one of their ancient vehicles. We looked them over and picked out what appeared to be the most likely one of the lot, and started for the city five miles further north. Our start was the best part of the trip. Half a mile out we broke a trace, and were delayed until another was hunted up that was concealed in a soap box full of junk. The box is carried on the front of the hacks for just such emerbox full of junk. The box is carried on the front of the hacks for just such emergencies. The rest of the trip was all right except we had to get out frequently to help the driver encourage his balky steeds. "Just as we drove into Copaquira we saw a gang of raliroad laborers doing something, they called it work, in a way that would drive an Irish foreman to drink. All work is done with wheetbarrows. Two men load the barrow and another wheels it away. While the one man was wheeling his barrow away and unloading it, the two shovelers calmly lighted their cigarettes had smoked in blissful patience, waiting for the return of the barrow. It looked like business (!). The grading can be done all winter, as there is no freezing here. "We stopped at the Hotel Ingtes, kept by three very blond and plump ladies, who do not speak a word of English. However, their flowers were fine, their meals good and their beds soft in spots, so we had no complaints." All salt found in Colombia belongs to The cash from the leases of the mines or the sale of the salt forms a large item in the revenues of the government. Foreign salt pays a duty of $3.20 per hundred, which gives the governmental monopoly ample protection. There are two mines here, one ninety feet above the other, and the entire space between filled with solid rock salt. The leads run into the mountains from $90 to 1.090 feet, and there are many large chambers on each side of the leads. In the upper mine there is a lake of salt solution, the water of which is piped down into the town and evaporated. The salt is dark and very hard, and is blasted down in large chunks and carried out by boys, in slings hung from their feathers. and carried out by boys, in slings hung from their foreheads and over their shoul-ders. "After responding to many cordial encores we all three retired on the same piece of matting and under the same piece of matting and under the same blanket to feed the fleas and make a play-ground for some half dozen rats until morning. On Thanksgiving morning we were at the falls again at 7:30 a. m. and as the sun was not then high we got an excellent view of the falls. The river where it planges over the precipice is about seventy-five feet wide and five or six feet deep and the current was about twenty miles an hoar at that point.

This mass of water plunges over the edge and falls about fifteen feet and then bounds out into space for more than four hundred feet more. There are large rocks all around the very edge of the falls where a person can look directly down, but the fall is so great the water is spray long before it reaches the bestom, and you can see for perhaps only 28 feet.

"The early morning is the only time to see this sight, and even then one must go around some 60 feet in front to get an entire view of the falls. The walls of the canon are too steep to climb down without ropes. Everything about Taquendama is perfectly natural, not a path, or seat, or anything cise, and not many people visit the place. If it was at home it would be almost as famous as Ningara.

"There are splendid coal mines about here and some gentlemen at Bogota are now putting in some machinery to utilize the power of the river above the falls to generate electricity for the light and power in this city.

"We got back to Bogota at noon and later received an invitation from the standard and the power of the river above the falls to generate electricity and interesting the search of the river above the falls to generate electricity and the search and the power of the river above the falls to generate electricity and the search and the power in this city.

"We get back to Bogota at noon and later received an invitation from Charles B. Hart late of the Wheeling Intelligencer, and now the United States Minister to Colombia, to eat Thanksgiving turkey and spend the evening. This was as pleasant as it was unexpected, and we filled up on pisco (turkey and cranberry sauce) until we were just as uncomfortable as we could have been at home. Mr. Hart and family are from Wheeling, and are friends of the Oglebays, Mrs. Suydam, Mrs. Ed Smith, Mrs. Kirk Armour, and others. They are very popular here, and have been very good friends to us. Last week we were very much surprised to have old Mr. Bate (the gentleman from Colorade of whom I have spoken before) come over to our room, lie has been down in the state of Causa looking up seme gold mines, and for three weeks saw but eight people. He is much impressed with the wealth of the country, but lack of transpertation takes the profit off many apparently good things.

"We are waiting anxiously for an answer to our cables to the company, as there is a remote chance that If we do not leave for Christmas presents, but they will be a little tardy in reaching you." The last letter is from Bogota and was written December 7. In it he said:

"The mail came in on the 1st, and again yesterday, but we drew no mail and were a great deal disappointed on that account. Our health is first-class, but we are getting tired of this loading about and would like to get to work soon, either here or learer home.

"They have a national election here in Colombia every six years, when they vote for electors the same as we do. The elec-tion took place here on Sunday and was quite a lively and interesting performance. There are three political parties, the government or Conservative party, the Opposition and the Liberals. The Liberals seem to be far the most numerous throughout the country to a stranger. The government party is composed chiefly of the police, soldiers and pie eaters; the opposition is the disgruntied portion of the Conservatives and includes some strong men. The campaign is conducted on different lines from the ones we are accustomed to. Instead of band wagons, torchlights and wholesale oratory, the candidate herevents his feelings without check in a manifesto address or proclamation which is stuck up on the side of the theater, church or postoffice and is the center of attraction until his opponent has one struck off and posted directly over it, which, of course, closes the argument temporarily. The voting qualifications are, I believe, that one must be 21 years of age, be able to read and write and have $600 worth of property. Soldiers and police are voters and exempt from these restrictions. The polis open at 8 a. m. and the square in front of our hotel has six voting poling booths (pens of panel fence), so we had a good view all day.

"There was a noisy and restless crowd around all day and they became especially excited when the soldiers were being voted. There are some 2500 of these in the city and they were marched unarmed in small squads to the different booths and voted by their officers, the crowd challenging every name offered and often assaulting the soldier step he had voted, but they were game and made a fight, too, and the police would rush in with their short little Winchesters and pound the crowd into order again. Several times during the day it seemed as if a riot on a large scale would result. The police had used remarkable forbearance and not fired a shot and the crowd commenced to disregard them, but 109 fully armed troops were marched up and it had a very quieting effect. But there were small scraps with the police all day and many heads and c
